

The Hurt Locker : movie review 2009

The Hurt Locker starts out with a crew of the U.S. army's Explosive Ordnance Disposal (EOD) in a cleared out street in Iraq using a robot to try to see into what looks like a pile of rubble , but is really a Road side bomb. The tension mounts as they prepare to defuse it and we get to see a side of war not ever seem by most military, yet alone the general public. This is a dangerous job defusing bombs while in unfriendly territory and not knowing who the enemy is or if the people who made the actual bomb are watching really to make it explode.

Jeremy Renner who plays Staff Sergeant William James trained with the actual Explosive Ordnance Disposal unit to add a sense of reality to the role. The dialog in this film is very, I would imagine very, realistic and added greatly to the films story and writer Mark Boal I do expect tt br nominated for some awards at year's end. I thought this was going to be just another war movie, but it's something more, it tells the story without being judgmental, and preachy.

Directed by: John Dahl, Cinematographer: Robert Macho, Editor: John G. C. Smith, Music by: Greg Kihn, Production Designer: Greg Kihn, Executive Producer: Greg Kihn, Producer: Greg Kihn, Distributor: Greg Kihn, Release Date: Greg Kihn, Running Time: Greg Kihn, MPAA Rating: Greg Kihn, Genre: Greg Kihn, Cast: Greg Kihn, Synopsis: Greg Kihn, Reviews: Greg Kihn, Trailer: Greg Kihn, Images: Greg Kihn, Soundtrack: Greg Kihn, DVD/Blu-ray: Greg Kihn, Website: Greg Kihn